"Someday" Savers

Some people intend to save "when they get around to it."

"When their earnings increase, after they buy a few more things they want, when they come back from their vacation, or at the end of the year, they begin to save."

Two or three years ago they probably said the same thing but conditions have never been just right for them to start—and never will be.

A dollar in a Savings Account is better than good intentions to save $100, which are never carried out.

Aristocratic Cattle.

Seventy-five years ago, cattle fanciers from everywhere began to seek lodges for their herds from the Blue Grass of Kentucky. At that time it was a purebred cattle country, as was a country of spectacular horses. And it was up in front with numbers and quality. Later, the West took away the advantage of numbers, but quality remained.

Some of the best of the world.

Glory came into the industry when cattle families were established. Sires and matrons with quality and given assembled on immense estates, and given family names. Their progeny inherited these rare qualities. For this reason, the members of Blue-Grass cattle families are as aristocratic as the human family. In fact, it is easy to trace through the histories of these families a sort of a parallel to the handiwork and the triumphs of men and women who made the original Caucasian Blue-Grass record.

Some of the best of the world.

The top crust of this progression is the "Woodlands." Any one who knows them merges all there is to say generally about the manner of origin, the surroundings, and the quality of the families. And, because of Woodford ownership and environment, as well as the history of the breed, the quality of individual dash as lapidary in the month, or 1.4 per cent. The number of acres farmed decreased with proportionate decrease in the number of families. In 1850, the number of families was 859, the number of acres farmed was 5,425,000 acres—a decrease of 870,000, or 15.8 per cent, an average decrease of 1.4 per cent.

Some of the best of the world.

While the acreage of farm lands was decreasing, the mortgages on farms were increasing. In 1850, the average mortgage debt per individual farm increased from $245 in 1810 to $1,506 in 1920—a total of $861. That is, the decrease in acreage was not compensated for by the increase in the mortgage debt. The necessary is indicated by the fact that Maine is capable of producing, and does produce, more food than it consumes. It is a fact that Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine.

Herefordshire had the most trouble getting a foothold in that country. North of the Ohio River they did very well. New England and New York, however, favored them. Eliza, Ohio, was known as "Herefordshire of America." It was a long time before the Hereford cattle of the Ohio River to colonize on the south side of it. Tradition and temperament in the Blue Grass favored short-horn, which gave them a better chance to show their way in. Henry Clay tried to go against this current in 1817. He imported the first Hereford of which there is record, and put them on his Kentucky farms. The herd was not a success. At this time they knew the old dog and the fat cat, only it was more generally an old dog or an animal of the other gender. Facts of these animals never have been improved upon for articles of food, but other parts had to be consumed to make them more palatable. These parts were made into meat loaves, sausages, yes, and mince pies. Mince pies have been born in a Volstead country, for they take something in the liquid line. Older boys now or is a common beverage with mince pies, and mince pies get so hard up to use vinegar. Time was when brandy was smuggled into some place. But that was in the good old time before Volstead was born. Since he got into congress and passed his noted act mince pies have deteriorated—at least some people think they have. These people long for the return of the good time when brandy sauce. At any rate, a petition has been presented Federal District Judge George T. Page to restore mince pies to the prohibition standing when brandy was a legitimate ingredient.

We have had a number of murders of late, many of which look as though they might become mysteries. It is an old saying that "murder will out," but notwithstanding this fact, some murders remain mysterious. A short time ago workmen digging for foundations of a villa at Simington, discovered a very ancient terra cotta tomb within which was the skeleton of a man, and a dagger thrust between his ribs just below the heart. Here is room for all kinds of speculation. Simington is now only a fishing village but in the days of the Roman Empire was a resort of wealthy Romans. In the neighborhood is the remains of a considerable Roman building called the Grotto di Catillo, said to be the country house of Catullus, the Roman poet. Now, reconstructing the house and people it with the friends of Catullus and one can guess how the man with the dagger dagger came to be in the terra-cotta tomb.

The late term of Supreme Judicial Court and the other legal tribunals of Oxford County have had and are having trouble with a mixture of what perhaps they would like to learn the correct solution. If it could talk for itself it might discover something like the following: "On the concentration of the attention of the mind to the kind of commodity bootleggers sell, I'm the king of Simington, I'm the monarch of the mountains, I'm the monarch of the mountains, I'm the monarch of the mountains."

Kund Rasmussen, the Danish explorer, recently made a trip to the northwestern part of Baffin's Island, to that part near Yath-Ked Lake and called Kewatin. Here they found Eskimo tribes, none of whom had ever seen a white man, although there were traditions among them that their ancestors had. Evidently that tradition was not of the best, for when Rasmussen and his men approached they went and shut up their women folk.

A shooting accident which occurred a few days since in the Maine woods, is currently reported, had several unusual features. First, it was not the sportsman who shot the game, but the game who shot the sportsman. Second, it was not a case of thought-it-was-a-deer, but the guide was actually shooting at a deer, and it was more than a deer that the sportsman was in the line of the bullet. And third, the shot was not instantly fatal, but the wounded man is expected to recover.

A few years ago the Owen family, being some English aristocrat located with his family 150 years ago, was purchased by H. K. Morton of New York City. The Owen family, who goes with his family every summer to his historic spot on Passamaquoddy Bay, where he has a great collection of valuable souvenirs gathered up from all parts of the world. This model was made by a former chief boatswain mate of the old Constitution and is a wonderful piece of work requiring a few years to complete. In recent years four very small wooden warships of the U. S. navy had been sold to junk dealers, towed to Eastport to be burned for their valuable metal, and many souvenirs are preserved by Eastport residents.
